

Hope And Trust: Politics, Social Development And Sports

By Dalton Watler-Lyons

CLM Publishing. Paperback. Condition: New. 216 pages. Hope and trust are two powerful words that imply a certain degree of expectation, realization, or probability that our idea or dream about something can come through, and in so doing, we anticipate a certain degree of confidence that the outcomes of our wishes will come through, because we trust the system. People hopes come as result of impotence, despair, or desire to change their present circumstances, and they trust that their expectations will become reality. This book demonstrates the importance of applying a talent identification tool with the intention of discovering young student athletes at primary school and the significance of the school of excellence as a prosocial agency and educational development. The true issue about peoples hope and trusting the sociopolitical system as a solution for their problems may have some validity; however, the dependence of lowincome families on welfare may be out of their financial and salary control. The situation of Cayman welfare and people depending on financial assistance is not the same as compared to ten years ago. The higher cost of living, inflation, networking, and education may by the reasons for the people of the Cayman Islands plunging...
