Excerpt from Union Steam and Water Heating Apparatus: For Warming and Ventilating Private Residences, Public Buildings and Institutions, School Houses, Churches, Stoves and Railway Stations, as Erected by Murray Winne The entire apparatus is located in the basement or cellar where is erected a steam generator or boiler, made of cast iron in separate sections, each a complete boiler in itself, so that by using a greater or less number of these sections, the capacity of the boiler will be increased or diminished to adapt it to the size of the building to be warmed. This, with its necessary appurtenances, is so constructed in substantial brickwork that we secure not only the power of heating up quickly and thoroughly, but, what is very desirable in warm weather, the ability of maintaining a gentle heat, by means of its external radiating surface, without assistance from the radiators, which insures the greatest economy in the consumption of fuel. The simple construction of our Boiler, and the fact that the fire is entirely surrounded by water, (except at the grate), makes it perfectly safe from accident by fire.
