Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Do you like to listen to the stories sitting in front of the camping fire? Funny stories, scary stories, silly stories? I can guess, for you read this, - you do. And I do. And our ancestors - ancestors of most European nations and many Asian nations - a Proto-Indo-European people, loved to do so. We don't exactly know when and where their culture emerged - 3-5 (or maybe 7-9, or even 10-13) thousand years ago somewhere in between Europe, Anatolia, Caucasus, Volga steppes, or Hindustan peninsula. However, we know the exact date and place when and where the idea of the ancient unity of the languages, cultures and mythologies, now known as Indo-European, had entered scientific circulation. That happened on February 2nd, 1786 in Calcutta, where British philologist Sir William Oriental Jones gave a lecture to the members of the Asiatick Society of Bengal. Since then, many bright scientists have worked in the field of reconstructing that culture which, although long gone, had affected our world so much. The typical way of bringing that ancient mythology back is to search for the similar narratives, personages, and specific vocabulary in the myths of contemporary Indo-European cultures. We now know a number of such persistent and ubiquitous stories; however, it would be fascinating to find more, perhaps not so popular, ancient Indo-European tales that did not leave many traces behind. Instead of looking for the common and known structures in many mythological narratives, we may want to look for the commonality of the hypothetical structure in the unknown fragments of the Proto-Indo-European reconstructions with the one or few myth(s) we know. One of the best resources to...
