It was clear almost from the begi n-ning, however, that this was not going to happen in Korea because there was a shortage not only of artillery units but also of the basic hardware of the cannoneers craft - guns and munitions. Until the front settled down into a war of attrition in the fall of 1951 ( which facilitated the surveying of refe r-ence points and positioning of an elaborate grid of batteries, fire direction 9 centers, and fire support coordination centers ), massed fires were 10 achieved by shooting at unprecedented speed. This tactic, in turn, exposed the fact that the huge surplus of World War II munitions was actually defi-cient in some calibers, and strict ammunition rationing became the norm until 11 production caught up with demand in the last days of the fighting. When the North Korean Peoples Army swarmed south across...
