Excerpt from The Commercial Crisis in Newfoundland: Cause, Consequences and Cure As to the effect 011 the merchant, when the latter gets into financial straits he. Has to buy fish at whatever price the market dictates. In order to keep up his foreign remit tances and save his credit. In such a conjunction as recently existed here, the. Merchant is vitally interested in keeping down the price of fish, and enters into a local combination for that purpose. Such a combination, while limiting the price in the local market, also opeiates to depreciate. The value of the article 7371 all 7110571113; for, 11s the foreign pur chaser takes pains to know what price is being given in Newfoundland, he so bases his prices 011 the latter-as to avoid giving any more for the fish than the extra cost and charges of exporting it to the foreign market. Thus a false or depreciated value in the local or Newfoundland market really depreciates the value of our eodfish all over the world, without correspondingly helping any one, unless it may be the foreign eonsniner.
